He says the "Citizens" Gift" has thrown water a distance of more than 300 feet. MYSTERIOUS AFFAIR-A Man Found Dead an Alley.-About half-past seven o'clock, vesterday morning, a man, who has not yet been identified, save as an ink-peddier, was ound dead in a private alley in the rear of coffee-house, on the corner of Clay and Lib-erty-street, kept by a man named F. Pronzius. There is no opening into the street rom the place on which he was discovered, but it may be reached through the rear yard but it may be reached through the rear yard of almost any of the buildings fronting on Clay, Main or Liberty-streets.

He was found by a barber named Schmidt, whose establishment fronts on Main-street, near Liberty, and whose yard is bounded in the rear by the alley in which the man lay. The deceased is about fifty years of age, and was plainly dressed, with black coat, gray pants, woolen sucks and slippers. His clothing and slippers were perfectly dry and unsoiled, as it he had been carried to the spot in which he was found, and left to die.

The rain fell in torrents during the greater.

The rain fell in torrents during the greater part of the night previous, and had not ceased at five o clock. The man was found at half-past seven, and was quite warm, al-though dead, so that he could not have lain there more than two hours. The body was there more that two nours. The body was not disfigured by any wounds; but there were purple spots on the face, and a large purple mark on the neck.

Coroner Carey was immediately informed

Coroner Carey was immediately informed of the affair, and impanneled a jury, which adjourned until this morning, in order to summon witnesses, and have the man identified. The body was taken to the establishment of Mr. Ehlman, on Main-street, opposite Orchard, where it still lies.

This affair is quite mysterious, from the fact that the deceased seems to be wholly unknown in the neighborhood, and could not have, reached the place in which he died without passing through one of the houses in the locality. His pockets were turned inside out, as if they had been rifled, but no marks on the body indicated a violent death, save those on the throat. The inquest to-day will probably develop the cause of his death, but the manner in which he reached the out-of-the-way place in which he was discovered, will doubtless remain forever a mystery.

DEMOCRATIC MEETING IN THE Republican Meeting at Eighth and Mound-SIXTH-ST. MARKET-SPACE LAST atreets-Speech of Senator Wale.

The Union was in great danger from the existence of two sectional parties—one great one in the North, the other small one in the South—the one desiring the exclusion of slavery from the Territories, the other demanding its protection therein. The true democratic doctrine, however, was non-intervention, and so important did the speaker regard this principle, that he repeated a number of times in different parts of his address, the assertion that it was the only thing that could insure domestic tranquility, and preserve the union of the States. serve the union of the States,

If a sectional party obtained the control of the government, and administered it upon of the government, and administered it upon sectional principles, the Union could not stand. As a Southern man, he came to plead for non-intervention, and pledged the Democracy of his section to that policy.

He ridiculed Northern sympathy for the Southern slaves, branding those who entertained those sentiments, and knelt down before the altar and prayed for the liberation of the African, as the basest of hypocrites. He then paid his respects to Mr. Breckinridge, who, he claimed, was elected as a non-interventionist, but who had described the good ventionist, but who had deserted the good old Democratic ship. During the delivery of the speech a gentheman attempted to ask him a question, but had proceeded no farther than, "Governor Johnson," when Mr. Jeremiah Kierstead caught him, and choked him until he was obliged to desist. The meeting was called to order about eight o'clock, and Senator Wade, taking the stand, proceeded to address the audience. He particularly devoted himself to taking to pieces the reputation which Mr. Douglas has made through his public sets, and spent an hour in dissecting the popular-sover-eignty doctrine.

The Democratic candidate for the Presidency, he said, wished to leave the people

Governor Johnson did not arrive on the ground till twenty minutes past eight o'clock, much to the chagrin of the crowd, as standing in the open air, in a muddy street, is any other than agreeable.

When the carriage containing the Governor arrived on the ground an accident happened, which at first threatened serious consequences, but which, fortunately, caused no great mjury to any person. On pussing the hay-scales, a wheel of the vehicle caught to one of the posts, which so frightened the horses that they broke loose, and ran through the crowd at the top of their speed, and were not stopped until several squares distant. Mr. Johnson and his associates alighted and mounted the stand, when he commenced his address, an organization having been previously effected, Judge Oliver in the chair.

After making some apologies, he remarked that the first duty of the people was to ascertain clearly, and comprehend distinctly the issues upon which they were called upon to decide. A great crisis was now impending, and he uttered no idle words when he said that, upon its decision depended the stability of this Confedersor. The Union

Nebraska Bill was before the Senate it was moved to amend it, so that the people could exclude slavery, and Mr. D. voted "no."

It was then moved that they be left at liberty to choose their own Governor. Again, Mr. Douglas voted "no." It was then thought that if the people governed themselves, they should select their own judges, and, for the third time, Douglas voted "no." The bill having no shadow of popular sovereignty about it, then passed, notwithstanding the Republican protest; and when Mr. Thayer introduced a bill afterward, giving the people of the Territories a right to govern themselves, it was defeated by the very supporters of sopular sovereignty.

Mr. Wade spoke of the English Bill, and the relationship Douglas bore to it; of Broderick, and the compact which the Senator from Illinois had made with him; of his attempt to recede from it, and the contemptible manner in which he senator the senator is the senator of the senator in the senator in the senator is the senator in the senator in the senator is the senator in the senator in the senator is the senator in the senator is the senator in the senator is the senator in the senator in the senator is the senator in the senator was a small man, was not willing to come again in contact with Mr. K., and he therefore wrote out his question and sent it upon the stand. After the conclusion of his remarks, Mr. J. took the paper, examined it, and proceeded as follows:

but the act was treason, and when it was attempted they would hang. Dissolve the Union! To talk of it, was to talk like a foot. He spoke of the idea of protecting slavery in the Territories, and stated what it meant and why the Democratic party opposed the Homestead Bill. It promoted emigration, and emigrants would not locate in the South. There were 6,000,000 of free white men in the South, 4,000,000 of slaves and 375,000 slaveholders. The 6,000,000 would leave for 160 acres of land each in the Territories, and the alave-owners would be very lonesome. bility. This can not be accomplished, and the want of a quorum will not necessarily prevent the election of the Senators. It is probable the two United States Senators will be elected by a coalition between the Douglas men and Republicans. Col. E. D.
